

9 OF THE BEST: Small space gardening tools

Are you a budding gardener? Start growing your own even in the smallest of outdoor spaces with these handy compact must haves

With the sun shining and the temperature rising outside, it's only natural to start looking at ways you can live up your outdoor spaces. But not all of us have the luxury of a large garden, which means we need to get a little more creative and careful with our outside planning.

If you're looking to grow your own kitchen garden of fruit and vegetables, gardening expert and 'Grow, Cook, Eat, Arrange' podcast host Sarah Raven suggests splitting the space up into concise sections. 'Even a small patch can be divided into four areas, ideally four quadrants with a cross of paths and a small, round central bed in which you could grow a tepee of sweet peas,' suggests Sarah. 'The four beds are then allocated to different plant groups: one for roots including potatoes, beetroot and carrots; one for things like beans and peas; one for salad and herbs; and one for a hotchpotch of things such as courgettes, sweetcorn and leafy greens, chard, kale and spinach,' she adds. Get a selection of tools such as rakes, spades and weeders – you can find small handheld designs that can be stored away compactly after use.

However, if ground space is limited then it's time to look upwards. 'If you've got no floor space to play with, take it from the window to the wall!' says Samantha MacNamara, Senior Brand Manager at Rowse Honey. 'Window boxes will help you to curate curb appeal while also providing bees with swarms of nutrients.' In fact, there are many ways you can utilise the vertical areas of your garden that have a huge benefit. Tall yet compact greenhouses are great for those looking to start growing vegetables and come in handy when the weather gets colder. Likewise, there are a range of compact versions of gardening essentials to buy these days. Just check out our favourite picks to help you. 🌱

Grow like a pro

Marcus Eyles, Horticultural Director at Dobbies, shares his tips on where to plant up in a small space this summer

- Living walls grow in popularity every year, as people are keen to increase their growing spaces. Great for cool, calm foliage like hardy ferns and ivies or create splashes of colour with a patchwork of bedding plants. They can also be productive with grow your own produce like tomatoes, lettuce, thyme, parsley and basil.
- For patios, planting in pots has become such a passion with a lot of people as it is so easy to change your garden as the seasons develop. Choose bigger pots as they are better for the plants to grow and make sure you are using the right compost to suit each plant. Combine planted pots into groups of foliage plants and flowering for best effect. Cannas, lemon trees

- and begonias will give a tropical feel in full sun. Fuchsias, busy Lizzies, bellflowers and hardy ferns make a cool, relaxing zone and grow best in the shade.
- Upright and trailing geraniums are really good for window boxes in full sun as they are also drought tolerant – useful if you forget to water sometimes. Troughs around the edge of your patio are super space-efficient and great for growing dwarf bush tomatoes, peppers and 'cut and come again' salads.
- Setting up garden shelves with collections of plants is a growing trend. A brilliant trick if you haven't got much ground space to work with is to line the shelves with the likes of primulas, geraniums or scented pelargoniums. Nicely spaced apart in beautiful terracotta pots, they will look stunning.
